CHILD SCALDED, DIES IN HOSPITAL

Little Raymond Weaver Makes Brave Fight of Three Months, but Burns Finally Prove Fatal. Deaths in the County.

From the effects of burns received last June, Raymond Weaver, Jr., grandson of Mr. and Mrs. James Weaver, of West Middle street, died late Tuesday night in the Harrisburg hospital. He was the three year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Weaver, now of Harrisburg, but formerly of Gettysburg.

The boy was burned on June 12, when he pulled a kettle of hot water on himself. He was taken to the hospital where he remained until July 3. Since that time the boy's wounds have been dressed by a district nurse, but his condition grew gradually worse.

Raymond was taken to the institution at 8 o'clock Tuesday evening, when physicians informed the mother that nothing could be done and the death occurred several hours later.

The body was brought to the home of the grandparents on West Middle street this afternoon on the 1:45 train over the Reading and the funeral will be held on Friday morning at nine o'clock in St. Francis Xavier church. Interment in the Catholic cemetery.

MISS NINA SMITH

Miss Nina Smith died at her home in Bonneauville at 2:30 Wednesday morning from tuberculosis, aged 34 years, 9 months, and 16 days.

She was the only child of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Smith, Bonneauville, who survive her.

Funeral Saturday with requiem mass St. Joseph's Catholic church at 8 a. m. Interment in the church cemetery. Relatives will accept this as an invitation to attend.

ETZLER SLAYBAUGH

Etzler Slaybaugh died at his home in Abbottstown at noon Wednesday from typhoid fever, aged about 21 years.

He was the only child and leaves his parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Slaybaugh. His mother is now suffering from typhoid fever.

Funeral from his home on Saturday morning. Interment at Biglerville.

MRS. SAMUEL WILHIDE

Mrs. Catherine Wilhide, widow of Samuel Wilhide, of Thurmont, died at her home, at that place on Tuesday aged 73 years and seven months.

She is survived by two daughters and one son, Mrs. Charles Addison, of Thurmont; Mrs. Harvey Boyce, of Newark, Del., and Joseph Wilhide, of Thurmont.

Funeral Friday afternoon at two o'clock, and interment in the United Brethren cemetery, at Thurmont.

GET BADGES

Guides' Ordinance will Become Effective this Week.

The first permits to the battlefield guides were issued on Wednesday by the National Park Commission. The badge is a showy affair, and may be seen at a considerable distance. Those who have been awarded the badges are wearing them with much pride.

Between fifty four and sixty will receive their permits during this week, and the borough ordinance will go into effect on Saturday. Guides to operate within the law must pay $1.00 fee for soliciting tourists in town.

FLAG ALWAYS UP OVER DORMITORY

Stars and Stripes never Missing now from Building at College is Announcement Made at Chapel Exercises. Other College News.

Announcement was made at the college chapel exercises at noon today that a United States flag would always float from the staff on the Old Dormitory. Former custom at the institution decreed that the flag should be raised only on gala occasions but the historical significance attached to the building made it seem proper that the Stars and Stripes should always be seen there, and through the kindness of G. W. Weaver and Son, who have agreed to furnish the supply, the new arrangement has been made.

The schedule for the college football team is as follows: Sept. 25, Cornell at Ithaca, N. Y.; Oct. 2, Bloomsburg Normal, at home; Oct. 9, West Point, at West Point; Oct. 16, State College, at State College; Oct. 23, St. Johns, at home; Oct. 30, Lehigh, at South Bethlehem; Nov. 6, Johns Hopkins, at Baltimore; Nov. 13, Bucknell, at Harrisburg; Nov. 20, Mt. St. Mary's, at home; Nov. 25, F. & M., at Lancaster.

During the occupation of the Old Dormitory by the Marines this summer various articles disappeared from the rooms. Boxes were broken open and articles removed which have not been recovered. Articles ranging from a pennant to a mattress, from an electric light bulb to a box of books were taken, which have not been recovered by the students. Complaints will be laid with the proper authorities and an early restitution is promised.

The new class contains a wealth of musical ability. The try-out for the orchestra and band have brought out some talent.

Students who live in town are now required to attend chapel and church services the same as those who live in the dormitories.

CHILD UNDER HORSE

Little One in Dangerous Position for a Time.

Quite a bit of excitement occurred on East Middle street Wednesday afternoon when the express wagon of Carl Rudy, three year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond H. Rudy, got beyond his control, ran off the pavement, and directly under a horse that had been tied to an electric light pole.

Fortunately the animal was very gentle and hardly moved while the child was in this precarious position. Mrs. Rudy, the mother, ran to his aid and gathered the little tot into her arms. Both mother and child were very much frightened.

THREE KILLED IN MOTOR MISHAPS

New Oxford Scene of Fatal Accident when Ford Car Strikes Buggy. Two Tourist Parties Figure in Another Fatality Near Caledonia.

Two fatal accidents occurred Wednesday evening, the first when two machines containing persons who had spent the day on the battlefield collided between this place a short distance beyond Caledonia; the second several hours later when the Ford roadster of Harold M. Swing, a traveling salesman, of Scranton, struck a vehicle near New Oxford. Swing was almost instantly killed.

The first accident took place about five o'clock when J. J. Rinehart, of Ringgold, Md., driving a seven passenger Paige car tried to go around a Packard owned by Miss S. C. Brown, of Cleveland, and driven by John Corey. Mr. Rinehart lost control of his car, and struck the Packard which threw the Paige into a ditch where it turned turtle. Rinehart sustained a fractured skull and died instantly. He was aged 45 years.

Miss Emma Shawkey, aged 50, Snow Hill, Missouri, was so badly injured that she died later in the Chambersburg hospital. She was crushed under the machine.

Mrs. Rinehart was pinned under the car and would likely have died but for the quick action of the Packard car chauffeur.

He lifted the heavy Paige car with a jack and secured her release. The others in the party were thrown clear of the car and escaped with slight injuries. The Packard was only slightly damaged.

Miss Shawkey and her father, John Shawkey, aged 84, were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Snively, of Waynesboro, who were also in the party.

The second accident occurred at the bridge over the Little Conowingo a short distance this side of New Oxford. Harold M. Swing, traveling salesman for the Landis Hardware Company, and well known locally, was on his way to Gettysburg and as he came over the bridge ran straight into the horse and buggy of Oscar Griffin, of Mt. Pleasant township, who had pulled to the side of the road when he saw the lights of the approaching car.

Swing's machine went over a fifteen foot embankment and he was thrown out. He was found nearby and died in about five minutes. He was badly crushed, and three ribs were broken. Two wheels of Mr. Griffin's buggy were demolished and Mrs. Griffin and their child were thrown out. They escaped with bruises.

Dr. Elgin, of East Berlin, who happened along at the time, and Dr. Seaks, of New Oxford, took charge of the body and had it removed to an undertaking establishment, from where it was sent to his home in Scranton to-day. Swing was about 35 years of age and leaves his wife who only recently underwent treatment in a Scranton hospital and is not in robust health.

THROWN FROM CART

Horse Ran away when it Took Flight at Motor Car.

Harry Wortz, Straban township, was thrown from his cart Wednesday morning and badly bruised when his horse took flight at an automobile on the Harrisburg road, about a mile from town. The cart was damaged, and the horse was not caught until it reached Gettysburg. It was so much injured that it could not be driven home. Mr. Wortz came to town and had his injuries dressed.

ANOTHER ONE

Elmer Weaver is Injured when Thrown from Buggy.

While driving along the Mt. Rock Road, about two miles from McSherrystown, Elmer Weaver's horse became frightened at a passing automobile and turned short, throwing Mr. Weaver to the ground. The rear wheels of the vehicle passed over his chest. In the accident Mr. Weaver received several bad cuts and bruises but was not seriously hurt.

NO SHORTAGE IN CHESTNUT CROP

Earlier Predictions will not be Borne out by the Yield. Frosts will Open the Burrs. Other Nuts Plentiful. Wild Turkeys Scarce.

Reports made to the State Department of Agriculture fail to bear out predictions of a failure of the chestnut crop because of the weather conditions, and districts in counties where the trees have escaped the ravages of the chestnut blight report the usual yield.

In spite of the spread of the troublesome tree disease, there will be a big crop of chestnuts generally throughout the State, only a few portions being very much short. The reports which have come to the State Capitol are that the chestnut trees are well filled with green burrs and that, with the coming of frost, there will be found to be more than ordinarily supposed. The continued rains and warm weather did not injure materially the chestnuts and there will be plenty in the mountain counties.

Hickory nuts also are reported as showing signs of being abundant in those portions where the trees survive, but there are doubts about the walnut crop in some counties.

Beechnuts, according to sportsmen, largely have disappeared and this is one reason why it has been so hard to keep wild turkeys alive. In years gone by the turkeys and other game lived on beechnuts, but this food supply practically has disappeared.

FARMERS' BULLETINS

State Has them Ready for Free Distribution.

Over 150 bulletins covering nineteen general subjects with a large miscellaneous list are made available for public distribution by the new bulletin of the State Department of Agriculture which has just been issued. It is the most elaborate list ever issued by a State department and covers a very wide range, the bulletins being by experts. The general classifications are on soils, including a survey of every county, fertilizers, lime, corn, wheat, alfalfa, tobacco, fruit, market gardening, dairying, beef productions, cattle diseases, poultry, swine, sheep horse breeding, domestic science, farm sanitation and hygiene, ornithology, co-operation, institutes, fairs, agricultural education, dynamite on the farm, concrete farm buildings and rural uplift.

AT REUNION

Veterans well Treated by Waynesboro Folk.

Shippensburg was chosen for next year's meeting by the Southern District Association G. A. R. at their reunion in Waynesboro Wednesday. A delightful time was enjoyed. The principal business was the election of officers, John Shugars, of Shippensburg, being chosen division commander. None of the officers came to Gettysburg. Waynesboro was most hospitable in its treatment of the visitors, nineteen of whom were from this place.

BULGAR MOVE

AROUSES GREECE

King Orders Mobilization After Cabinet Meeting.

WAR CERTAIN, SOFIA VIEW

Czar Ferdinand, Believing Allies Are Losing, Casts His Lot with the Teutonic Powers.

London, Sept. 23.—Balkan advisers leave little doubt that Bulgaria has cast its lot with the Germanic allies and will attack Serbia, though no confirmation has yet been received of an Athens report that a Bulgarian army has crossed the Serbian frontier.

A dispatch from Athens says Bulgaria has mobilized the first, sixth, seventh and tenth divisions, totalling 80,000 men, on the Serbian border. On receipt of the news that Bulgaria had ordered a general mobilization, King Constantine of Greece summoned to conference Premier Venizelos and the members of the general staff of the army. The premier subsequently called a meeting of the cabinet.

At the end of the conference between King Constantine and his cabinet it was reported that a decree ordering mobilization of the Greek army had been signed.

The Bulgarian minister, M. Mischief, was advised by telegraph of his government's orders. He stated this meant Bulgaria would maintain her neutrality, but that it would be an armed neutrality. On being asked whether Bulgaria intended to join with the central powers, M. Mischief replied emphatically: "Certainly not." He said he had no further information and reiterated the assertion that the new move implied nothing more than that Bulgaria was adopting the same precautionary measures as already had been taken by Switzerland and Holland.

Hope was expressed that Bulgaria might yet be deterred from joining the Germanic alliance. It was reported this afternoon that the British foreign office had not abandoned its efforts and that a final demand from Sofia, that Bulgaria be given all the territory taken from it after the Balkan wars is under consideration. This demand is said to have been transmitted to all entente powers Saturday, and the next day King Ferdinand signed a mobilization decree to convince the allies that Bulgaria was not wavering.

ORDER U-BOATS NOT TO IMPERIL LINERS

Must Not Run "Slightest Risk of Error."

Berlin, Sept. 23.—Commanders of German submarines have been given strict orders, it has been learned authoritatively, that in case of doubt as to the intentions of liners, they are to take the safe course and permit the ship to escape rather than run the slightest risk of error.

This order supplements the instructions as communicated to the Washington government by Ambassador von Bernstorff on September 1. There is reason to believe the new regulation already is known to Washington as it probably was embodied in the message of instructions sent the German ambassador a few days ago.

It is understood that the United States already has been informed that various officers of the submarine which sank the Arabic agreed from observations taken while the submarine was on the surface and through the periscope while it was submerged that the Arabic was planning an attack, and that it was not until an hour later, at the West Thirtieth street police station, and more than $12,000 in cash had been removed from the lining of her corset that her identity was revealed.

6 DIE, MANY HURT AS STREET DROPS

Crowded Surface Car Falls Into New York Subway.

PEDESTRIANS ARE BURIED

Dynamite Blast Tears Away Tunnel Shoring and Caused Disaster—Many Women and Girls Are Victims.

New York, Sept. 23.—Six persons were killed and between eighty-five and one hundred others injured when a dynamite blast in a partly constructed section of the Seventh avenue subway caused an entire block of pavement to cave in, engulfing a crowded surface car, a heavy truck and many pedestrians.

A number of laborers at work in the excavation were buried under tons of debris. Seventy-eight persons, a considerable number of them being women and girls on their way to business, were on the surface car, which dropped thirty feet into the excavation and was partly buried under concrete, rails, heavy timbers, dirt and rocks.

The dynamite blast, which resulted in the cave-in, was set off almost directly under Seventh avenue and Twenty-fifth street, according to Chief Engineer Jones, of the construction company. He told the fire commissioner the blast had hurled a large rock against portions of the underpinning, knocking this away and allowing the pavement overhead and portions of the dirt sidewalks to collapse. The accident occurred shortly before 8 o'clock and more than half of the injured were women and girls on their way to business. Although the surface car remained upright, it was partly buried under an avalanche of concrete, rails, timbers and earth, and many of the passengers were severely crushed.

Persons who were in a large office building, close to where the car went down, said there was a great roar as the pavement and portions of the sidewalks sank. This was followed a moment later by the cries of the party entombed passengers and of pedestrians who were either thrown into the excavation or knocked down by the falling debris.

Men and women smashed the car windows with their bare hands in an effort to escape, eye witnesses said, while pedestrians who had been thrown into the hole struggled to avoid the falling debris and regain the street level.

Police reserves were called out, two fire alarms were turned in and fifteen ambulances with thirty surgeons were rushed to the scene. The hospital corps of the city and the fire department were also called out.

The cave-in broke water and gas mains, and within a few minutes after the accident heavy flows of gas and water threatened the lives of the 100 or more persons in the excavation. Prompt work by city employees in shutting off the flow of water and gas in the broken mains put an end to this danger.

Fire ladders and ropes were lowered into the great hole and police and firemen began carrying out the dead and injured, while contractors employed and others worked furiously, clearing away the timbers and debris that imprisoned many persons.

Within an hour more than fifty injured persons had been removed from the cave. Two of these, a man and a woman, died on the way to hospital. A short time later the rescuers reached the worst part of the wreckage and the first corpse was recovered.

Victims were carried out by police and firemen to nearby stores and of fices which were turned into temporary hospitals. Nearly all of these victims were seriously injured, many having broken arms or legs.

EXTEND ARTILLERY DUEL TO FLANDERS

Allies Rain Shells Continuously on German Lines.

Paris, Sept. 23.—The artillery fighting along the western front, so prevalent in the past few weeks, has extended to Belgium, according to the French official report.

General Joffre, the French commander-in-chief and the allied commanders on this front—Field Marshal Sir John French and King Albert of Belgium—are developing a new plan of campaign that involves the almost continuous use of artillery on a vast scale along the whole line.

Masses of artillery have been employed by both sides since the beginning of operations in preparing for infantry attacks, pounding their adversaries' works for an hour or two, then suddenly suspending fire and assaulting with infantry.

The allies are now methodically maintaining their shell fire for days at a time without infantry attacks, dropping projectiles upon the charred front into every fifty-yard square, and repeating the process—a deadly, automatic, unceasing pounding. The heavy caliber guns send their storms of shells upon encampments of first reserves behind the lines, and upon the bridges and provision trains.

Official reports show that parts of the opposing lines which have been subjected to this unceasing bombardment have been rendered entirely untenable and that the best the Germans can do is to reoccupy their abandoned works after the bombardments have let up and then leave quickly when the showers of projectiles begin to fall again.

$60,000,000 WAR ORDER

Westinghouse Electric Co. Gets Contracts for Rifles for Russia. New York, Sept. 23.—A $60,000,000 war order was announced by the directors of the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing company.

In connection with this the directors issued a statement as follows: "The company has received firm contracts for the manufacture of war munitions aggregating approximately $60,000,000, the greater proportion of which is a contract for rifles which is to be executed at factories in New England especially acquired for the purposes."

GIVES ADVICE

Treatment of Peach Trees in September is Told.

During the early part of September a peach grower wrote to State Zoologist H. A. Surface, Harrisburg, saying, "Some of my peach leaves are showing a reddish brown to yellow hue. This is the second summer for these trees. They made from two to five feet of growth this summer. What treatment can you recommend for this this fall or next spring to bring them out with healthy green foliage?"

"How do you overcome that brown bug which stings the peach, and seems to cause the worm in it, and makes the fruit drop? Is it safe to continue planting cultivated crops between tree rows that are coming into bearing?"

To this series of inquiries Professor Surface replied as follows:

"It is too late in the season to do anything for the peach trees now excepting to remove the worms from them at once. This should be done as soon as possible, using a knife, and making the cuts vertical or lengthwise of the trees, rather than crosswise. When they become dormant prune them back well. It is too late to do any summer pruning now. Whatever you do in the way of cutting back trees now will tend to force new and succulent growth, that will be much more sure to be killed by freezing this winter. It is also too late to apply nitrogen fertilizer or to cultivate your trees at this time.

"I have no doubt but that their present condition is due to partial freezing early last winter. They were then too dormant very vigorous, and consequently froze more easily. What you should do at this time is to practice those methods that will help them to become dormant, rather than to push them into vigorous late growth. Next spring stimulate their growth by nitrogen fertilizer and by cultivation, but do not attempt it this fall.

"The insect of which you make inquiry as stinging the fruit is the curculio. This can be destroyed by spraying with one ounce of arsenate of lead in each gallon of water, spraying just after the husks of brown-collars fall, and again in three weeks.

"It is all right to plant a cultivated crop between the trees if you wish. This can be continued year after year, or as long as the crops will grow between the trees of increasing size and vigor. It will not hurt the tree as soon as it will the crops, but you will soon reach the stage when the crops will not grow well enough to be profitable to you from their standpoint. Something depends upon how far apart your trees have been planted. It is best to use a cultivated crop that does not demand late cultivation that will stimulate late growth of the trees."

AMERICAN WOMAN ON BATTLE FRONT

Tells of Her Work as a Motor Ambulance Driver.

DRESSES IN KHAKI TROUSERS

Says England at First Refused the Aid of Women, but Now Accepts Their Services Gladly—Common People Little Interested in the War—Describes a Zeppelin Raid Over Camp.

Mrs. Bartlett Boder, one of the first American women to drive an ambulance in the European war, arrived in America with thrilling stories of her months at the front.

Mrs. Boder is a New Yorker, but she is going back to England before Christmas.

"I can't keep away," she said. "It is all so fascinating—the soldiers in uniforms, the gay bands, the great camps, the air of expectancy for whatever the day may bring.

"I have been as far front as any woman dares go," she announced enthusiastically. "I have been to the base hospitals in Rouen and Boulogne. I have carried wounded soldiers from the battle front to the hospitals, but the thing I want to do most is to drive the great army trucks that carry provisions to the men. I could do it, too, just as well as any 'Tommy' only it takes the red taped British government so long to get it through its funny English head!

"Several women I know have been decorated by the king of the Belgians for conspicuous bravery. I—I guess I'd rather have that happen to me than anything I can think of."

Woman Becomes Chauffeur.

Life is stern these days in England, and women are brave with courage hitherto undreamed of. A chum of Mrs. Boder's, a girl who has lost five brothers and six cousins in the war, is now running the automobile of a family at whose home she was formerly an honored guest. She eats in the servants' quarters that the men chauffeurs may be free to fight.

"But England is still asleep," Mrs. Boder declared. "As a fighter the average Englishman is a topping success, but he wants to do the proper thing even at the battle front. Why, I have seen boys work and pull every string they could to get in one of the so-called 'royal' regiments, especially the gunners' corps. They knew it meant certain death, but they did it because it was the swagger regiment of a certain division.

"England doesn't yet know she is fighting for her life. Some of her wisest great men see it, but the mass of the people sit back and just watch events in self righteous complacency. Their ego is so colossal nothing has yet shaken it.

"The common people in England do not care a continental about the war, and they do not hesitate to say so. They know how much depends on them, and they are making a great show of parading their importance. They take the whole sidewalk, the laborers do, and they almost seem to glint over the numbers of the royal families and the nobility who have been killed.

"Sure, it's their fight; let them go to it," is the attitude. 'The nobles,' they say, 'are fighting for their castles and their land. We have nothing, so we won't fight.' That's why England will have to resort to conscription.

Sees a Zeppelin Raid.

Mrs. Boder dramatically described a Zeppelin raid on England, which occurred while she was at a large camp near the channel.

"I heard the roar and knew a Zeppelin was on the way," she said. "The first thing we are trained to do in such cases is to snatch our respirators. I got mine and ran to the window. There, hundreds of feet in the air, the Zeppelin roared on its way, flashing bombs toward our camp. As I watched a fleet of airships soared after it, and all were soon lost to sight. One man was 'gassed' as a result."

"Gassed" is one of the new verbs the war has coined. Men are not always shot, but often "gassed."

There were funny tales, too, in all the adventures the American woman related. Men many times mistook her for a comrade in her masculine attire and often asked for a match or a cigarette. One day a soldier slipped her on the back and hailed her with a "Hey, Bill, what's the baseball score?" "I jumped. It sounded so much like home," Mrs. Boder laughed.

And Once She Cried.

"Once I lost a rear wheel off my truck while traveling near Ardols. I was all alone, and when I tried to jack up the machine it just sagged down, and I couldn't budge it. So I sat by the roadside and cried. I couldn't help it. It was so maddening not to be able to get that machine fixed by myself.

"I like to see the lights in New York," Mrs. Boder concluded. "Night is terrible in London now. After the sun sets it looks like a city of fear. Everything is as dark as the tomb. Even the houses are shrouded in blackness. There are theaters packed with people, there is gaiety, but there is fear too. Deep underneath the surface of things England is really losing a little of its complacency. London at night isn't so cocksure as it used to be."

GERMANS HAVE NEW BIPLANE.

Machine May Be Capable of Flying to London and Back in Five Hours.

The new type of giant biplane undergoing tests in Germany is said to have a measurement of 42½ meters (about 46½ yards) across the plane. The motors develop 300 horsepower and each works three propellers.

These biplanes are capable of carrying sufficient fuel for flights of eight hours. They are equipped with wire less and searchlights. Each carries twelve bombs, weighing twenty-two pounds apiece, and five machine guns.

Biplanes of this type will have crews of eight men and will be able to travel to London and back in five hours. The engineers who constructed them obtained the idea from Russia.

GERMAN SOLDIERS BUSY MAKING WINTER WEAR.

Thousands of Shoes and Suits of Clothing Turned Out Daily.

Leipzig is busily engaged in preparing winter clothing for German soldiers. Before the war began the military outfitting business there was easily taken care of by a small plant just outside the city, employing not more than 250 men. The few wooden buildings of the plant have been added to until they now cover acres of ground, where some 4,000 men and women are employed. The output has increased to 3,000 shoes, 3,000 coats and several thousands of pairs of trousers a day.

Most of the men employees are of military age and capacity. They wear fatigue uniforms and live under military control in wooden barracks and joining the plant. Few of them but could on a few hours' notice move out to the fighting front and exchange needles and tools for rifles. Simply they are more valuable as tailors and shoemakers than as infantrymen or artillerymen.

It has been reported that Germany is short of leather and that its supplies of cotton and woolen goods are not as large as they should be, but there is no indication of it at the Leipzig plant.

Leipzig is but one of a large number of German cities that have had to adapt themselves to army needs. Cassel, for instance, has turned over its huge, new and expensive public hall and gathering place to the making of clothing for the army, and in the rooms that once were the scenes of banquets, dances and merry-making there today are piled thousands upon thousands of uniforms and in its corridors hundreds of soldiers sit cross legged on tables, busily sewing.

SPALDING WIDELY KNOWN.

Every Boy Who Plays Baseball Familiar With His Name.

The name of Albert Goodwill Spalding, who died recently, is probably known to as many persons in the United States as that of any other man who has not been in public office. He became a ball player when the game first became popular at the close of the civil war.

He was offered $2,500 to become a professional ball player, but he preferred to stick to a business career which he had mapped out for himself. But fate clung to him, and in 1871, after a financial panic and the failure of a business house by which he was employed, he signed to pitch for the original Boston Red Stockings.

He became manager of the Chicago club, and the club became champion and held the championship for years. While in Chicago he and his brother, W. J. Spalding, established the nucleus which later became the extensive sporting goods business of A. G. Spalding & Bros., with stores in nearly every city from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast.

PENROD

Copyright, 1914, by Doubleday, Page & Company

CHAPTER XV. The Imaginator.

MEANWHILE, for Penrod himself, life had taken on new meaning, new richness. He had become a fighting man—in conversation at least. "Do you want to know how I do when they try to slip up on me from behind?" he asked Della. And he enacted for her unappreciative eye a scene of little maneuvers wherein he beat an imaginary antagonist helpless in a lot of stratagems.

Frequently, when he was alone, he would outwit and punish the same enemy, and, after a cunning feint, land a delicious stroke full upon a face of air. "There! I guess you'll know better next time. That's the way we do up at the Third!"

Sometimes in solitary pantomime he encountered more than one opponent at a time, for numbers were apt to come upon him treacherously, especially at a little after his rising hour, when he might be caught at a disadvantage—perhaps standing on one leg to incense the other in his knickerbockers. Like lightning he would hurl the trapping garment from him, and, ducking and pivoting, deal great sweeping blows among the circle of sneaking devils. (That was how he broke the clock in his bedroom.) And while these battles were occupying his attention, it was a waste of voice to call him to breakfast, though if his mother, losing patience, came to his room, she would find him seated on the bed pulling at a stocking. "Well, what's the matter, fast as I am?"

As the clock was still about the house, he was perpetually bad with famous misinformation and assumed a domineering tone, which neither satire nor reproach seemed able to reduce, but it was among his own intimates that his new superiority was most outrageous. He twisted the fingers and squeezed the necks of all the boys of the neighborhood, and their indignation with a hoarse and gasping cry, "Penrod!" and a few short bursts in the stable, where he feared and taunted the lawnmower, the garden scythe and the wheellarrow quite out of countenance.

Likewise he bragged to the other boys by the hour, Rupe Collins being the chief subject of encomium—next to Penrod himself. "That's the way we do up at the Third," became staple explanation of violence, for Penrod, like Tartarin, was plastic in the hands of his own imagination, and at times convinced himself that he really was one of those dark and murderous spirits exclusively of whom "the Third" was composed—according to Rupe Collins.

Then, when Penrod had exhausted himself repeating to himself accounts of the prowess of himself and his great friend, he would turn to two other subjects for vainglory. These were his father and Duke.

Mothers must accept the fact that between babyhood and manhood their sons do not boast of them. The boy, with boys, is a Choctaw, and either the influence or the protection of women is shameful. "Your mother won't let you," is an insult. But, "My father won't let me," is a disquieting explanation and cannot be heated. A boy is ruined among his fellows if he talks much of his mother or sisters, and he must recognize it as his duty to offer at least the appearance of persecution to all things ranked as female, such as cats and every species of fowl. But he must champion his father and his dog, and, ever ready to pit either against any challenger, must picture both as ravaging for battle and absolutely unconquerable.

Penrod, of course, had always talked by the code, but, under the new stimulus, Duke was represented virtually as a cross between Bob, Son of Battle, and South American vampire, and this in spite of the fact that Duke himself often sat close by, a living lie, with the hope of peace in his heart. As for Penrod's father, that gladiator was painted as of sentiments and dimensions suitable to a superhuman composed of equal parts of Goliath, Jack Johnson and the Emperor Nero.

Even Penrod's walk was affected. He adopted a gait which was a kind of taunting swagger, and when he passed other children on the street he practiced the habit of feinting a blow, then as the victim dodged he rasped out the triumphant horse laugh which he gradually mastered to horrible perfection. He did this to Marjorie Jones. Are, this was their next meeting, and such is Eros, young. What was even worse, in Marjorie's opinion, he went on his way without explanation and left her standing on the corner talking about it long after he was out of hearing.

Within five days from his first encounter with Rupe Collins, Penrod had most alienated Sam Williams, who for a time submitted to finger twisting and neck squeezing and the new style of conversation, but finally declared that Penrod made him "sick." He made the statement with fervor one sultry afternoon in Mr. Schofield's stable in the presence of Herman and Verman.

"You better look out, 'bo," said Penrod threateningly. "I'll show you a little how we do up at the Third."

"Up at the Third!" Sam repeated, with scorn. "You haven't ever been up there."

"I haven't?" exclaimed Penrod. "I haven't?"

"No, you haven't." "Looky here," Penrod, darkly argumentative, prepared to perform the eye to eye business. "When haven't I been up there?"

"You haven't never been up there." In spite of Penrod's closely approaching nose Sam maintained his ground and appeared for confirmation. "Has he, Herman?"

"I don't reckon so," said Herman, laughing.

"What?" Penrod transferred his nose to the immediate vicinity of Herman's nose. "You don't reckon so, 'bo, don't you? You better look out how you reckon around here. You understand that, 'bo?"

Herman bore the eye to eye very well. Indeed, it seemed to please him, for he continued to laugh, while Verman chuckled delightedly. The brothers had been in the country picking berries for a week, and it happened that this was their first experience of the new manifestation of Penrod.

"Now, Herman, you better look out," the sinister Penrod demanded. "I don't reckon so. How come you ast me?"

"Didn't you just hear me say I been up there?"

"Well," said Herman mischievously, "hearin' ain't believin'."

Penrod looked at the boys for a moment, then he turned and walked away, his head bowed, his hands in his pockets, and a look of dejection on his face.

"You take that back," Penrod shouted, striking out wildly.

"Don't get mad," begged the small darky, while a number of blows falling upon his warding arms failed to abate his amusement, and a sound one upon the cheek only made him laugh the more unrestrainedly. He behaved exactly as if Penrod were tickling him, and his brother, Verman, rolled with joy in a wheelbarrow. Penrod pummeled till he was tired and produced no greater effect.

"There!" he panted, desisting finally. "Now I reckon you know whether I been up there or not!"

Herman rubbed his smitten cheek. "Pow!" he exclaimed. "Powee! You cert'ly did lay me good one that time! O-ee, she hurt!"

"You get hurt worse'n that," Penrod assured him, "if you stay around here much. Rupe Collins is comin' this afternoon, he said. We're goin' to make some policemen's bills out of the rake handle."

"You go' spoil new rake you' pa bought?"

"What do we care? I and Rupe got to have bills, haven't we?"

"How you make 'em?"

"Meit lead and pour in a hole we're goin' to make in the end of 'em. Then we're goin' to carry 'em in our pockets, and if anybody says anything to us—oh, oh, look out! They won't get a crack on the head—oh, no!"

"When's Rupe Collins coming?" Sam Williams inquired rather uneasily. He had heard a great deal too much of this personage, but as yet the pleasure of actual acquaintance had been denied him.

"He's liable to be here any time," answered Penrod. "You better look out. You'll be lucky if you get home alive if you stay till he comes."

"I ain't afraid of him," Sam returned conventionally.

"You are too." There was some truth in the retort. "There ain't any boy in this part of town but me that wouldn't be afraid of him. You'd be afraid to talk to him. You wouldn't get a word out of your mouth before old Rupe'd have you where you'd wished you never come around him, lettin' on like you was so much. You wouldn't run home yellin' 'mam ma' or nothin'. Oh, no!"

"Who Rupe Collins?" asked Herman.

"Who Rupe Collins?" Penrod mocked and used his rasping laugh, but instead of showing light he came appeared to think he was meant to laugh, too, and so he did, echo'd by Verman. "You just hang around here a little while longer," Penrod added grimly, "and you'll find out who Rupe Collins is, and I pity you when you do."

"What he go' do?"

"You'll see that all. You just wait."

Rupe strode across the still

At this moment a brown hound ran into the stable through the alley door, wagging a greeting to Penrod and fraternized with Duke. The fat faced boy appeared upon the threshold and gazed coldly about the little company in the carriage house, whereupon the colored brethren, ceasing from merriment, were instantly impressive, and

The Fat Faced Boy Appeared Upon the Threshold and Gazed Coldly About.

Sam Williams moved a little nearer the door leading into the yard.

Obviously Sam regarded the newcomer as a redoubtable if not ominous figure. He was a head taller than either Sam or Penrod, head and shoulders taller than Herman, who was short for his age, and Verman could hardly be used for purposes of comparison at all, being a mere squat brown spot, not yet quite nine years on this planet. And to Sam's mind the aspect of Mr. Collins radiated Penrod's portentous foreshadowings. Upon the fat face there was an expression of truculent intolerance which had been cultivated by careful habit to such perfection that Sam's heart sank at sight of it. A somewhat enfeebled twin to this expression had of late often decorated the visage of Penrod and appeared upon that ingenious surface now as he advanced to welcome the eminent visitor.

The host swaggered toward the door with a great deal of shoulder movement, carefully feigning a slap at Verman in passing and creating by various means the atmosphere of a man who has contemptuously tossed himself with underlings while awaiting an equal.

"Hello, 'bo?" Penrod said in the deepest voice possible to him.

"Who you callin' 'bo?" was the ungracious response, accompanied by immediate action of a similar nature. Rupe held Penrod's head in the crook of an elbow and massaged his temples with a hard pressing knuckle.

"I was only in fun, Rupe," pleaded the sufferer, and then, being set free, "Come here, Sam," he said.

"What for?"

Penrod laughed pitifully. "Pshaw, I ain't got to hurt you. Come on."

Sam, maintaining his position near the door, looked at Penrod and him and caught him round the neck.

"Watch me, Rupe," Penrod called, and performed upon Sam the knuckle operation which he had himself just undergone. Sam submitting mechanically, his eyes fixed with increasing uneasiness upon Rupe Collins. Sam had a premonition that something even more painful than Penrod's knuckle was going to be inflicted upon him.

"That don't hurt," said Penrod, pushing him away.

"Yes, it does, too!" Sam rubbed his temple.

"Puh! It didn't hurt me, did it, Rupe? Come on in, Rupe; show this baby where he's got a wart on his finger."

"You showed me that trick," Sam objected. "You already did that to me. You tried it twice this afternoon and I don't know how many times before, only you weren't strong enough after the first time. Anyway, I know what it is, and I don't!"

"Come on, Rupe," said Penrod. "Make the baby lick dirt."

At this bidding, Rupe approached, while Sam, still protesting, moved to the threshold of the outer door, but Penrod seized him by the shoulders and swung him indoors with a shout.

"Little baby wants to run home to its mom-muh! Here he is, Rupe."

Thereupon was Penrod's treachery to an old comrade properly rewarded, for as the two struggled, Rupe caught each by the back of the neck, simultaneously, and, with creditable impartiality, forced both boys to their knees.

"Lick dirt!" he commanded, forcing them still forward, until their faces were close to the stable floor.

At this moment he received a real surprise. With a loud whack something struck the back of his head, and, turning, he beheld Verman in the act of lifting a piece of lath to strike again.

"Em moys ome!" said Verman, the giant killer.

"He tongue tie," Herman explained. "He say, let 'em boys alone."

Rupe addressed his host briefly: "Chase them nigs out o' here!"

"Don't call me nig," said Herman. "I mine my own business. You let 'em boys alone."

"I mine my own business. You let 'em boys alone."

Rupe strode across the still

Sam, stepped upon Penrod and, pushing his countenance with the terrific scowl and protruded jaw, lowered his head to the level of Herman's.

"Nig, you'll be lucky if you leave here alive!" And he leaned forward till his nose was within less than an inch of Herman's nose.

He added to this that something awful was about to happen, and Penrod as he rose from the floor suffered an unexpected twinge of apprehension and remorse. He hoped that Rupe wouldn't really hurt Herman. A sudden dislike of Rupe and Rupe's ways rose within him as he looked at the big boy overwhelming the little darky with that ferocious scowl. Penrod all at once felt sorry about something indefinable, and with equal vagueness he felt foolish. "Come on, Rupe," he suggested feebly. "Let Herman go, and let's us make our bills out of the rake handle."

The rake handle, however, was not available if Rupe had inclined to favor the suggestion. Verman had discarded his lath for the rake, which he was at this moment lifting in the air.

"You ole black nigger," the fat faced boy said venomously to Herman. "I'm a-goin' to!"

But he had allowed his nose to remain too long near Herman's. Penrod's familiar nose had been as close with only a ticklish spinal effect upon the not very remote descendant of Kongo man eaters. The result produced by the glare of Rupe's unfamiliar eyes and by the dreadfully suggestive proximity of Rupe's unfamiliar nose was altogether different. Herman's and Verman's Bangala great-grandfathers never considered people of their own fragile neighborhood proper material for a meal, but they looked upon strangers, especially truculent strangers, as distinctly edible.

Penrod and Sam heard Rupe suddenly squawk and bellow, saw him writhe and twist and fling out his arms like dials, though without removing his face from its juxtaposition. Indeed, for a moment the two heads seemed even closer.

Then they separated, and the battle was on!

Use Doan's Kidney Pills.

Here's Gettysburg testimony.

Verify it if you wish.

John J. Tawney, 234 Baltimore St., Gettysburg, says: "I suffered off and on from rheumatic pains and kidney ailments. My back ached constantly and often in the morning I was so lame and stiff that I could hardly get out of bed. The kidney action was irregular. Someone advised me to try Doan's Kidney Pills and I got a supply at the People's Drug Store. I was surprised at the quick relief I got. I am not bothered by rheumatic pains now and I am much better in every way."

OVER TWO YEARS LATER, MR. Tawney said: "I still use Doan's Kidney Pills, in fact I always keep them in the house. I know that if I take a few as soon as I have any symptoms of kidney trouble, I will avoid a great deal of suffering."

CZAR'S ARMY IS INTACT

Petrograd Claims Foe's Left Is Halting
and Right Is Yielding Ground—Cul
Way Out of Vlna Trap.

Petrograd, Sept. 23.—General Ruzsky is firmly holding back the German left wing on the Dvina front. General Evarts' army escaping the tolls of the Vlna salient is successfully continuing its retrograde movement from the Vlna front toward Minsk, inflicting heavy losses on the pursuing enemy. General Ivanoff's troops are gaining ground against the Teutonic right wing, composed of Austro-German forces, in Volhynia and Galicia.

Taken all in all, the positions of the great Russian armies are highly favorable.

This summary of the military situation was made by a high official of the Russian war office. At the same time he expressed the belief that the German offensive on the front between the Baltic and the Pripiet marshes was nearing its end. To corroborate this he cited information to the effect that three German corps (120,000 men) had disappeared from the front. It is probable that these troops have been transferred to the Serbian front, he said. The German apparently fear to entrust the Austro-German army again with the task of conducting an invasion of Serbia.

The official confirmed reports that General Evarts' army had extricated itself from the German enveloping movement of General von Hindenburg and Prince Leopold. "The German efforts to surround a large part of our forces resulted in complete failure," he asserted.

"The Bavarians suffered terrible losses in their advance south of Sloim. This halted Prince Leopold until he could receive reinforcements and when these arrived the German line had been upset.

"The Russian army is intact. Their morale is unimpaired. It is a characteristic of the Russian soldier that he fights well on retreat as well as on advance. Never has this shown in larger measure than in our recent campaign of steady withdrawals."

Russian Dvinsk Line Pierced.
Berlin, Sept. 23.—Field Marshal von Hindenburg's troops have pierced the Russian positions over a front of nearly two miles southwest of Dvinsk (Dunaburg). It was officially announced by the German war office.

The Germans captured 1,500 officers, 100 men and eight machine guns. Troops of the command of Prince Leopold have stormed the Russian positions on the Myshanka river, on both sides of the Brest-Litovsk-Minsk railway, capturing 1000 prisoners and 10 machine guns.

—Thought to Be Spaniard.

Paris, Sept. 23.—Fred Moore, of Mobile, Ala., was sentenced to five years in prison and twenty years' banishment from France following his conviction on the charge of espionage.

Moore was caught with letters addressed to the German war minister which were concealed in the fold of his collar.

A letter from Ambassador Shari was read in court which expressed the belief that Moore really is a Spaniard.

FOUR GOOD PICKLES.

RIPPE CUCUMBER PICKLES.—Pare, seed and cut in twelve large ripe cucumbers, and then cover them with boiling water, add a handful of salt and let them stand overnight. In the morning drain and boil in water until they can be pierced with a straw. Drain, cover with cold vinegar and stand again for twenty-four hours. Drain and cover with the following: One quart of vinegar, three pounds of white sugar, three ounces of cinnamon buds, which have been scalded for a few minutes.

Baltimore Pickle.—Two quarts of ripe tomatoes, two quarts of green tomatoes, twelve medium sized onions, three red peppers. Chop fine, salt overnight, and in the morning drain and add to two quarts of vinegar, a pound and a half of sugar, half a cupful of yellow mustard seed, half a cupful of horseradish, one tablespoonful of celery seed. Boil half an hour or until well done.

Melon Pickle.—Pare off the rind from one or two just ripe melons, remove the seeds and pith and cut the melons into moderately large squares about half an inch in thickness. Cover the fruit with cold vinegar for ten days, then remove it into a saucepan with fresh vinegar and simmer as gently as possible until the melons are tender, but not broken. Drain the fruit upon an inverted sieve and when cold put it into glass jars. Next make a pickle with ten ounces of granulated sugar to each pint of vinegar, add a slight flavoring of lemon or ginger, as preferred, and boil for twenty minutes. When the pickle is cold fill up the jars with it, which then tie down closely or cork tightly, as most convenient. This is a very delicate pickle.

Japanese Chowchow.—Take twelve medium sized green tomatoes and twelve small pickled lines; put both through the food chopper, using the medium sized cutter and removing the seeds from lines. Add six cupfuls sugar and let cook slowly for three hours. Put into jars or tumblers and when cold cover with paraffin.

DUMBA SUMMONED HOME 'ON LEAVE'

Notifies Washington of Vienna's
Action.

Washington, Sept. 23.—Dr. Constantin Theodor Dumba, the Austro-Hungarian ambassador, notified the state department that his government had called him home on leave.

The ambassador said he expected to sail September 28 on the Rotterdam. He advised the state department in a telegram from Lenox, Mass. Dr. Dumba accompanied the announcement with the request that this government arrange for his safe conduct through enemy territory. This request, it was announced, had not yet been granted, the state department having entered into negotiations with the Vienna government regarding it. Thus far the state department has no word from Vienna relating to its summoning Dr. Dumba home.

There will be no decision reached by the administration regarding whether further action is to be taken on the letters taken from James F. J. Archibald, the American correspondent, and made public in London until this government is in possession of all the documents in the case.

It is considered almost certain that Captain von Papen, military attaché of the German embassy, will be ordered sent home by the ambassador, Count von Bernstorff.

Captain von Papen's expression: "I always say to those idiotic Yankees that they had better hold their tongues," is declared by officials close to the administration to be so undeniable that his retention here would reflect on the administration. Inasmuch as it is admitted that his usefulness here is at an end, it is believed that when Count von Bernstorff and Mr. Lansing meet next week the recall of the military attaché immediately will be demanded.

ADMINISTRATOR'S SALE OF VALUABLE REAL ESTATE AND PERSONAL PROPERTY

On Saturday the 25th day of September, 1915, the undersigned, Administrator of Cornelius Bender, late of Butler township, Adams County, Pa., deceased, by virtue of an order of sale from the Orphans' Court of Adams County, will offer at public sale on the premises the following valuable Real Estate and Personal Property:—

REAL ESTATE
A Farm situate in Butler township, Adams County, Pa., adjoining lands of Elmer Slaybaugh, John Fohl and Calvin Rice, containing about Ten Acres of good farming land; improved with a Brick Dwelling House, containing eight rooms, Summer House, Stable, Well and Cistern, and a young Apple and Peach Orchard. The property is beautifully located on the public highway leading from Bendersville Station to Centre Mills, about one mile from the former, and a half mile from the latter place, and is a few minutes from, and in view of Centre Mills Station on the Reading Railway. This property is located in a good, prosperous community, convenient to churches, school house and stores, and is on elevated ground, affording a fine outlook over a wide stretch of farming community.

At the same time and place the following Personal Property will be offered:—Household goods consisting of a bed-room suit,

Slenderizing the Stout Woman

HERETOFORE, the stout woman who desired to be correctly fitted, had to choose between a few staple, stock styles carried by her retailer, or go to an expensive dressmaker to have her coats and suits made. One of our manufacturers has carefully studied the problem of faultlessly fitting her in the very newest and timeliest modes—the stout woman now has as great an opportunity for dressing stylishly as her slim sister.

In our shop we have a line of coats and suits which will fit stout women flawlessly, yet are the latest creations of prominent fashion authorities.

You will find among them the newest models, trimmed in self materials, fur, or novelty fabrics. And remember—correct fitting is assured. An early call is urged.

A Medieval Tale

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

Medieval times were profile of stories of the devil, who was supposed to be going about making bargains for souls. A great many such tales illustrating his methods have been handed down to us from that age in which they were believed by those who circulated them. Here is one that has remained dormant for many years. It was told me by an American millionaire who bought a castle in Germany and found the legend among papers that had not been disturbed for hundreds of years.

Count Caspar Ardenst, the lord of the castle in question, was in love with Bertha, the daughter of a neighboring Baron Cronschild. There had been a feud between the families, and Cronschild refused the young count the hand of his daughter.

One evening the count was sitting in his cabinet, disconsolate that he must be deprived of his love, when the door opened and a man entered wearing a pointed beard and an upturned mustache.

"Who are you," asked the count, "and how did you gain access to me unannounced?"

"I am the devil," was the response, "and I have come to help you to win the hand of the girl you love."

"Leave me; you will require a soul to pay for your assistance."

"You are right. I must have the soul of your firstborn child."

"Begone, I say; I will have nothing to do with you."

"Then you must give up all hope of a union with the Countess Bertha. Her father will never yield."

The devil stuck to his work, conversing with the count and constantly getting him under his satanic influence. Caspar asked him how he would accomplish his object, and he said the baron was a skillful chess player. The devil would tempt him into playing a game, the winner to name a husband for his daughter. Caspar, who was desperately in love, finally consented, but only after wringing from the devil a certain condition. He might redeem his child's soul if he could beat the devil at a game of chess. This did not seem likely, but it was the only hope Satan would give.

The bargain having been struck, Satan sent the baron word that he had heard of his remarkable skill at chess and challenged him to a contest. The baron, much flattered, invited the challenger to his castle. Satan appeared in the person of an agreeable young man giving evidence by his rich attire and general lavishment of being a grand personage. He told the baron that he would play him a game of chess, the stake to be what he had named to Caspar. "The baron," supposing that he wanted Bertha for himself, consented of course the devil beat the baron, and this was the first time for a husband for his daughter. Count Caspar, however, the baron consented to the trickster at the same time and wondering why he had befriended the lovers.

Since there was nothing against Count Caspar but the feud with which he had nothing to do, Baron Cronschild made the best of it and soon became attached to his son-in-law. Caspar told him how he had won his consent and what he had agreed to pay for it. This excited the old man to spend a great deal of time studying difficult chess problems in order that when the devil came to claim his grandchild he might redeem him by beating the arch fiend at his own game. He was so proud of his ability as a chess player that he really aspired to beat the devil.

The day a man child was born to the count and countess was both a happy and a sad one. The lady had learned from her husband the secret that her baby's soul must go to the devil, and since she was very religious the calamity was the more awful. Her father assured her that her son was safe, for it had been stipulated that if any one could be found to beat the devil at chess the bargain would be off. He (the baron) had learned a number of combinations any one of which was sure to win.

The mother proposed that the baby be baptized at once, hoping that this might forestall Satan, but before it could be done he appeared and claimed the child's soul. Since all depended on a chess contest the count proposed that three games be played between the baron and the devil, two games to win. So they sat down at once and began to play. Satan said he would play the first game with his eyes shut. He purposely threw away the game, but even without seeing the chessmen he could have beaten his antagonist. If he had been so disposed. The second game he beat the baron in less than a dozen moves.

Cronschild refused to play the third game, declaring that the best chess player in the world could not beat one who played using supernatural means. The count went to his wife to impart the news that their son's soul depended on the third game, which the devil was sure to win. Bertha said she had been praying to the Virgin Mary for help and had been told what to do. When her husband went back to the devil he said he would play the third game himself. Satan laughed scornfully, but sat down at the board.

Half a dozen moves had been made and Satan had but two more to make to checkmate when Caspar threw his knight and displayed a bold cross. Satan cried under the table and left the room like a dog with his tail between his legs.

And he never came back for his pay.
